Mary Gauthier

with opener

Jaimee Harris

November 9 @ 7PM

Gauthier's first nine albums presented extraordinary confessional songs, deeply personal, profoundly emotional pieces ranging from "I Drink," a blunt accounting of addiction, to "March 11, 1962," the day she was born — and relinquished to an orphanage — to "Worthy," in which the singer finally understands she is deserving of love. Maybe that's where the confessional song cycle ends, for she has midwived these eleven new songs in careful collaboration with other souls whose struggle is urgent, immediate, and palpable. And none are about her.
